CHAPTER XXL Thomas Jefferson Gordon, Bachelor of Science, and one of the six prizemen in his class, was expected home on the first day of July; and it was remarked as a coincidence by the curlous that Deer Trace manor-house was closed for the summer no more than a week before the return of the Gordon black sheep. That Tom was a black sheep, a hope-

When it became noised about that there were two children instead of one in the old dog-keeper's cabin in the glen, Mountain View avenue was justly indignant, and even the lenient Gor-

The evening being still young. Tom tried Rockwood and the Dell, suspicion settling into conviction when the trim mald-servant at the Stanley villa went near to shutting the door in his face. At the Dell he fared a little better. The Young-Dicksons were going out for an after-dinner call on one of the neighbors, and Tom met them at the gate as he was dismounting. There were regrets apparently hearty; but in recasting the incident later, Tom ramembered that it was the husband who did the talking, and that Mrs. Young-Dickson

"Once more, old boy, and then we'll quit," he said to Saladin at the remounting, and the final rein-drawing was at the stone-pillared gates of Rook Hill. Again the ladies were not at home, but Mr. Vancourt Henniker came out and smoked a cigar with his customer on the piazza. The talk was pointedly of business, and the banker was urbanely gracious-and mildly inquisitive. "Been out callin, son?" he asked, flight save one, the courage requisite to the final step-taking, The following morning the prominition became a certainty. In the Gordonla mail there was a note from the younger Gordon, directing him to come to the office of the pipe foundry, bringing the cash-book and ledger for a year whose number was written out in letters of fire in the bookkeeper's brain, He went, again lacking the courage either to refuse or to disappear, and found Gordon waiting for him. There were no preliminaries. "Good-morning, Dyckman," said the tyrant, pushing aside the papers on his desk. "You have brought the books? Sit down at that table and open the ledger at the company's expense account for the year. I wish to make a few comparisons," and he took a thick packet of papers from a pigeonhole of the small iron safe behind his chair.

Dyckman was unbuckling the shawlstrap in which he had carried the two heavy books, but at the significant mand he desisted, went swiftly to the door opening into the stenographer's room, satisfied himself that there were no listeners, and resumed his

'You'll not find it, Dyckman," said, divining the desperate purpose of the other; adding, as an after-thought: "and if you should, you wouldn't have the courage to use it. That is the fatal lack in your make-up. It is what kept you from taking the train last night with the money belt which you emptied this morning. You'll never make a successful criminal; it takes a good deal more nerve than it does to be an honest man."

Hereupon the young man from the office across the pike came in, and Gordon handed a pen to Dyckman. "I want you to witness Mr. Dyckman's signature to this paper, Dillard," he said, folding the confession so that spent itself there was a little calm, not it could not be read by the witness; and when the thing was done, the young man appended his notarial at-testation and went back to his duties.

"Well?" said Dyckman, when they were once more alone together. long as you are discreet, you needn't lose any sleep over this. If you don't mind hurrying a little, you can make

But before he closed the office door behind him he had seen Gordon place the typewritten sheet, neatly folded, on top of the thick packet, snapping an elastic hand over the whole and returning it to its pigconhole in the small safe.

The Shah's Highway.

It is true we have some bad roads, out most of our highways compared with those of Persia would be as a paved street to a plowed field, says a correspondent of Harper's Weekly. You would think that the keeping of the shah's highway would be one of the first cares of a state, yet so little attention has been given to this subject by the Persian government that there are not a dozen good wagon roads throughout the whole country.

The caravan routes are, except in very few cases, merely trails. Not only are the wagon roads bad as well as scarce, but it is an astonishing fact that although Persia is one of the oldest of civilized states, a counttry comprising an area of 628,000 square miles and a population of 9,000,000, she has but six miles of railthe fittest.
